Above: a partial view of the Fountain of Rome as it appears today. In the 19th century it was practically all demolished as it was considered dangerous. In the foreground, the boat of the Tiberine Islet, above left, before the statue of Rome, the group of the She-wolf suckling the twins Remus and Romulus, also by Pierre de la Motte. The structure as a whole was undoubtedly conceived by Pirro Ligorio, the Cardinal's archaeologist. - On the lefthand page, below: general view of the Fountain of Rome.
